NEURODIVERSITY AND INCLUSIVE PRACTICE

CAROLINE WHITE & JOHN HARRINGTON

Students with neurodiverse profiles are frequently disabled by the learning environment. This interactive session will initially consider specific student profiles and their corresponding difficulties such as motivation, working memory and self-esteem. It will then explore ways we can provide a more inclusive education. Drawing on students' experiences, the session will explore a range of practical strategies which will benefit the wider student community. The session will reflect on a range of practical transferable interventions which can be embedded in a variety of learning contexts
